DBSA Is Here For You

DBSA’s mission is “to provide peer to peer hope, help and support to foster recovery in the lives of people living with depression, bipolar, and other mental illnesses.” To accomplish this goal we provide support groups, encourage advocacy, provide educational programs, help empower people, share recovery tools, and provide health information. The Oklahoma state DBSA office makes every effort to provide these resources to improve the lives of our members.

We are very proud of our members as they participate in our programs and work on their individual recovery. We recognize that recovery means different things for everyone with mental illness. The DBSA staff encourages all its members to take advantage of these resources. We are grateful to all our trained facilitators who work very hard to make their support groups a place where people can regain hope in their lives.

DBSA provides support groups around the state. Our free peer-led support groups are the foundation to achieve our mission statement. Every group no matter how large or small meet regularly to provide a setting where people can come and help each other discover new ways to strengthen their recovery. Respect, compassion, kindness, and confidentiality are the cornerstones of these groups.

DBSA provides ideas on advocacy. DBSA advocates for people and teaches people to advocate for themselves and other people with mental illnesses. People learn that finally they must take responsibility for their own recovery. DBSA members go to the capitol and into hospitals to make people aware of services for persons with mental illness.

DBSA provides education programs. Facilitators are trained and supported with other learning activities through the year. Guest speakers are brought in to further people’s knowledge. There is a monthly educational meeting that all members can attend.

DBSA provides empowerment techniques. In DBSA meetings people are helped to discover their strengths. DBSA offers many social activities where people can learn how to experience life in their community other than in a support group. When people see others sharing their successes, they experience empowerment themselves.

DBSA provides recovery tools. One of the most beneficial lessons people can learn are recovery tools that have helped other people. Tools like coming to meetings, exercising, journaling, establishing routines in their lives, always taking their medications, listening to music, getting out of the house, and many other recovery fostering tools. People learn that they must be realistic in their expectations but “recovery is a reality.”

DBSA provides valuable information. We also gain more information about our diagnosis. DBSA’s website and brochures provide valuable information about our diseases. DBSA participants are learning more about wellness activities and how they can lengthen their lives. We also have a large library to provide more information on mental health issues.

The more people participate in DBSA support groups and activities, the more they experience hope again. Their lives will improve and they will experience less stigma. Hand in hand we discover we are not alone and our lives have meaning and purpose again. DBSA does change lives.

Hypochondria?

Brian, one of the worlds greatest hypochondriacs, bumped into his Dr. one day at the supermarket. “Doc!” Brian exclaimed, “I’ve been meaning to tell you, remember those voices I kept on hearing in my head? I haven’t heard them in over a week!” “Wow! What wonderful news Brian! I’m so happy for you!” his Dr. exclaimed. “Wonderful?” asked a dismal looking Brian. “There’s nothing wonderful about it. I’m afraid my hearing is starting to go now!
Anxiety, Depression, and Caffeine

Caffeine works by stimulating the central nervous system. It can aggravate the symptoms of existing anxiety disorders, and can trigger panic attacks, according to the National Institute of Mental Health.

"Caffeine produces the same physiological arousal response that is triggered when you are subjected to stress - increased sympathetic nervous system activity and a release of adrenalin," writes Edmund J. Bourne, Ph.D. in the Anxiety & Phobia Workbook. It keeps you in a chronically tense, aroused condition, leaving you more vulnerable to generalized anxiety and panic attacks. Caffeine also causes a depletion of vitamin B1 (thiamine), one of the so-called anti-stress vitamins.

If you have an anxiety disorder, you should limit caffeine or avoid it.

People who are depressed may want the "lift" they get from drinking coffee, but it can have the opposite effect as it wears off. It can contribute to anxiety and mood swings. And even small amounts of caffeine can keep you from getting enough sleep, which can make depression worse. You might want to avoid caffeine for a week to see how it affects your mood.
